

don't DRY out...

Are you growing money-saving plants?

Lawn and garden plants that save you money and need less work? It's true!

- “Native” plants are better suited to grow in the climate and soil conditions of our area. Massive root systems make them drought tolerant. You save time and money, because you don't have to water as often.
- “Native” plants are also very hardy. They are disease resistant and rarely need fertilizer. This saves money, too. And in the long run, the less we use fertilizers, the longer we keep our waterways clean, safe and beautiful.
- When buying your landscaping plants, remember to ask the store for plants from our local area or the next geographic region. You'll be rewarded by Mother Nature and your wallet.
